Thyroid Disorders

Over 10 million Americans have been diagnosed with thyroid diseases and it is estimated that thousands more may have undiagnosed thyroid problems. Women are affected more often than men. Because the thyroid plays such a key role in many body systems, problems with the thyroid can affect every part of life. The thyroid is a small gland located in the neck, which produces several key hormones which regulate metabolism, mood and the nervous system.

Hypothyroidism occurs when the thyroid does not produce enough hormone. Symptoms can include exhaustion, depression, weight gain and inability to lose weight, low sex drive, difficulty concentrating, joint and muscle aches, hair loss and constipation. On the other hand, hyperthyroidism occurs when the thyroid produces too much hormone. Symptoms can include rapid weight loss, difficulty sleeping, anxiety, nervousness, diarrhea, dry hair and skin, difficulty getting pregnant and difficulty concentrating.

Problems with the thyroid have numerous causes. They can be caused by a deficiency in iodine or by radiation, which was once a treatment for children with an enlarged thyroid. Thyroid disorders can also be caused or worsened by medical drugs, exposure to cigarette smoke or drinking tap water that contains fluoride or other toxic chemicals.
